"Rapidly-evolving digital technology presents law enforcement with new and difficult challenges that we must be able to overcome. As the tragic attack in my hometown of San Bernadino illustrates, technology has become an essential part of the terrorist and criminal toolbox. Now is the time to bring the country together to answer some very difficult questions. Unfortunately, the current debate that is playing out in popular media does not bring us any closer to finding lasting solutions. We need all sides of this argument to engage one another and commit to doing right by the American people in both their personal and private lives, and in the interest of national security and public safety.

"The Digital Security Commission proposed by Chairman McCaul and Senator Warner will provide the right forum for a serious analysis of this issue by bringing together experts from law enforcement, intelligence, and technology and asking them to work collaboratively. I fully support the Commission, and commend Chairman McCaul and Senator Warner for their leadership and foresight."
